When West Michaelson returns home from his latest SEAL mission overseas, he knows he'll get a hero's welcome. But this time, he doesn't want it. This time he's coming back to attend the funeral of his best friend, John, who was shot during the mission right in front of his eyes.

The worst part of it all is John's widow, Shelley. West made a promise that he would look after John's loved ones, and Shelley needs his help. That's if he can convince her that she wants it. Not only does she hate him for taking her husband away on long missions, but she also blames him for his death – a sentiment he shares. Can West convince her to accept his help before she gets into bad shape? And more importantly, can he ignore the feelings for his best friend's widow that are starting to grow inside of him?
