For the most part you only become a Marine by volunteering. So that makes every Marine, part of an exclusive club, "The Few," "The Proud," "The Marines." George P. Unger enlisted in the "Corps," to serve his country while at war, believing wholeheartedly in it. He chronicles his youth, his growing up in the Corps, and his journey to a war that he would ultimately, barely survive. This book should make painfully aware, of what war is, it bespeaks of terrible tasks, and the horrors of war. After RVN, "Never Again" was espoused, yet today we are embroiled in "Once Again," and Marines, as is usual, lead the way. Every Marine in combat is a hero, it is just that some are more heroic.

This book can be multiplied hundreds or perhaps thousands of times, tasking ordinary American youth, into soldiers, and the memories that never disappear, and the final acceptance, of a brutal war that America lost. Lost, not due to its fighting men, but rather by those who sent them in harm's way.
