Brock Bowen is an African American backup singer and session artist touring the southeast with a southern rock band who likes to keep his sexual preference quiet. Conner Lawson is a tech tycoon who has made a living in music sound research and technology. When Conner conducts sound research at a concert Brock is singing backup for, the two meet and have an instant attraction. They hit it off at a local show following a concert and soon find themselves tangled in passion.

After a hot night Conner seems to be falling fast, but Brock is hesitant. As Conner works to prove his feelings, Brock must work to understand and overcome his own emotions.

Expecting to be judged, he realizes he has closed himself off by passing judgement on others.

Can Brock's openness and tolerance for all types of music translate to his love life?
