THE BROKEN PROMISE: The Finding of a Black Man, The Hope for the Black Woman Brigette Taylor

Being in the lineage of our founding fathers, the Black man has failed to uphold the soundless promise of our fore fathers. Not all Black men fit this category. There are many successful, outstanding, intelligent, artistic and creative Black men of today. However, for the purpose of this book, I, the author chooses to generalize. To have one Black man committed to a system of slavery for a crime he has committed, affects us all as a Black nation. That is our son, brother, or father that has fallen from grace of the fore fathers. It is for the Blacks as a nation to find a solution to save that which is apart of us without criticism. The soundless promise of our fore fathers is the individuals thrive of the Black man to endure, persevere through all obstacles, misfortunes, discriminations and unjust. The soundless promise is the thrive without hatred, malice and oppression... Black men and women have always been the mastery of creation. As far back as the 1800s, Black people have been heroic achievers in the arts of dance, poetry, music, sports and so much more... I wish at this time to commend our Black leaders, both Black and White, for their success at removing the Confederate Flag from atop of the State House Dorms. I further took notice of the South Carolina State House where at the Confederate Flag was removed from atop the Dome and placed on the lawn as a commemoration of the Confederate Army. It was a great achievement and a success when the flag was brought down from our Governing body that is to represent all men equally here in the state of South Carolina. However, this Confederate flag is an honor to be flown as a memorial. It represents defeat of one Nation and victory of another. It is apart of the Black American History, and is finally in its place. According to the Wikipedia online encyclopedia, the American Civil War of 1861-1865, was a war between the United States (the Union) and the eleven Southern slave states: South Carolina, Mississippi, Florida
