Here is a professionally told and yet intensely personal story of a father who lost his daughter's love when his ex-wife turned his own child against him in a documented case of Parental Alienation Syndrome (PAS). The author was an active father and had good relationships with all his children. When his wife left, she took his youngest child and only daughter with her. His relationship with that child deteriorated rapidly, until the child refused all contact. She had developed PAS. PAS is controversial and many professionals deny its existence. But the author, a physician, kept meticulous records over the three year custody battle. The result is a chronology of annotated excerpts from more than 800 emails and thousands of pages of transcripts, discovery documents, and court rulings. The author shows exactly how and why his ex-wife systematically destroyed his relationship with his only daughter. The title refers to letters the author wrote to his daughter, and one chapter is devoted to these letters. Several chapters diverge from the chronological story line. One explores the history of PAS over the eons. Others demonstrate how PAS is induced in a child, how to resist the induction of PAS, and how to approach a custody battle in court when PAS is involved
